A Little Bit About Us

In the late 1960's a skilled craftsman made his way to McAllen, Texas from a tiny Mexican border town. Not long after his arrival, Guadalupe Cantu built and sold a small home in the Mission, Texas area. It would be the first of many homes built by a man whose name became synonymous with quality construction.

Then, in 1978, Guadalupe's son, Alonzo, began working for his dad. From the start, it was obvious that he had the same penchant for high-quality construction. After graduating from the University of Houston with a degree in finance, Alonzo assumed complete responsibility for Cantu Construction. Alonzo made a conscious decision to become a builder, like his father.

"I like construction, and I like to build and create," Alonzo said "Our designs are based on places we've seen when we travel, the architecture books we read, our customers visions, and on our own innovations."

In the beginning, a pick-up truck served as Alonzo's office. Today, Alonzo's employees work out of Cantu Construction's corporate office and manage an ever-expanding number of subcontractors who employ several hundred workers.

The philosophy of Cantu Construction is diversification and industry leadership, which has kept the company going strong, even during tough economic times. Alonzo and his team have taken the South Texas building industry to the next level by bringing the newest architectural designs, construction techniques, and materials into the Rio Grande Valley.

"Quality and service set us apart," Alonzo said.

Under his direction, Cantu Construction has expanded its services to include the entire real estate spectrum, from land acquisition and development to the design and construction of thousands of fine homes, medical centers, banks, and commercial plazas. The company's commitment to versatile construction and development has resulted in its success and growth.

At Cantu Construction, we don't build structures, We build our customers' dreams.
